Awards encourage strata professionals to aim high

The Institute of Strata Title Management (ISTM) last night announced the winners of the annual Schindler Strata Industry Awards for Excellence at a gala dinner attended by over 400 strata industry representatives. The awards honour high achievers in the strata industry and this year seven winners were announced out of field of eighteen finalists

ISTM President, David Ferguson said this is an opportunity to showcase the best and brightest individuals and companies in the industry and to set a benchmark for others to work towards, especially in this historic year for NSW strata.

“This is about recognising professionalism in the strata industry in NSW where the first strata legislation, and registered strata scheme in Australia, started 50 years ago this year,” David said.

“The Awards, along with the move to a National licensing system from 2012, mark the next 50 years of strata not just in NSW but around the country.”

“This year we handed awards out across seven categories. Those categories include awards for the best younger strata managers and the best managers with experience, both were new awards introduced this year.”

“The judges were impressed with all submissions stating they were highly professional and that some decisions were made difficult because of the high standards.”
